Pittsfield is getting some outside help in its ongoing quest to bring development to town.

The Capital Region Development Council will spend the coming months helping elected officials and local business owners brainstorm ways to bolster existing companies and bring new ones to Pittsfield.

Stephen Heavener, the council's executive director, is working with several towns around Concord but says Pittsfield is particularly ripe for development. The town, he says, has a good water and sewer system, pro-business selectmen, and plenty of useable land and buildings.

Residents with any ideas or suggestions for Pittsfield's future can contact Heavener at 228-1872 or call town hall at 435-6773.
